

STUDIES IN SECURITY AND INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

The Studies in Security and International Affairs series, a collaborative effort of the University of Georgia Press and the university's Department of International Affairs in the School of Public and International Affairs, focuses on scholarly monographs offering new perspectives in the following areas: crises in American foreign policy and global governance; public health policy; human rights initiatives; new security threats, including terrorism and cyber technologies; rising powers and regional hotspots within the Middle East, Asia, Africa, and South America; and post-conflict reconstruction.

Books in this series draw from the fields of comparative politics, foreign policy, international relations, and security policy. The series aims to cross disciplines and attempts to bridge gaps, including those between the academy and government, and between nations and independent actors.

series editors

sara z. kutchesfahani is the director of the N Square DC Hub and research associate at CISSM. N Square is a path-breaking initiative built on the idea that new forms of cross-sector collaboration will accelerate the achievement of internationally agreed goals to reduce nuclear dangers. Together with her N Square responsibilities, she also works at CISSM in both a teaching and research capacity. | skutches@umd.edu

amanda murdie is a professor of international affairs and the Dean Rusk Scholar of International Relations at the University of Georgia. She has served as a consultant for the Ford Foundation's Global Human Rights Portfolio and the International Council of Voluntary Agencies in Geneva, Switzerland. She is a member of the Social Science Korea Human Rights forum, the incoming editor of International Studies Review, and the author of Help or Harm: The Human Security Effects of International NGOs. | murdie@uga.edu
