Many a Hand

Michigan and the Civil War

by Roger L. Rosentreter

Many a Hand: Michigan and the Civil War brings together familiar and little-known stories about Michiganians who—in facing the nation’s most challenging ordeal—combined courage, doggedness, and ideals to produce an enduring legacy both at home and on the battlefield.

Retracing the Dragoon Trail in Iowa

Environmental Transformation along the Des Moines River

by Kevin T. Mason

Iowa’s story of change, from removing Indigenous nations and farming its prairies and wetlands to the growth of a lively conservation movement, comes alive in this definitive human and environmental history that shows how the land and its people have constantly influenced each other.

APRIL 2026 978-1-61186-569-1 pb., 978-1-61186-568-4 hb., 6 x 9, 330 pp., $34.95, $69.95 (T)

The Greatest Scientific Gamble

A Story of Impossible Odds, Rival Scientists, and the Atomic Bomb

by Michael Joseloff

The Greatest Scientific Gamble weaves the stories of Enrico Fermi, J. Robert Oppenheimer, and Sam Goudsmit with that of Manhattan Project director Leslie Groves to create a high-stakes, big-picture narrative about the successes and setbacks of Manhattan Project scientists, Allied efforts to sabotage the German bomb program, and the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Possession(s)

stories by John Smolens

In settings both familiar and exotic—from the windswept shores of the Great Lakes to the rugged beauty of rural Ireland and Scotland, the bustling boulevards of nineteenth-century Paris, and the streets of an ancient Italian hill town—Smolens unveils an electrifying collection of short stories. Each narrative delves deep into the labyrinth of our fears, doubts, and uncertainties, all while being laced with sharp irony, unexpected humor, and an unwavering spirit of tenacity.

JANUARY 2026 978-1-61186-556-1 pb., 6 x 9, 192 pp., $19.95 (T)

Late Invocation for Magic

new and selected poems by Jim Daniels

In these poems, Daniels focuses on Detroit and other Rust Belt cities, where issues of class and race and justice play out in the streets and kitchens and backyards and garages of the Americans trying to live and make a living there.

Extant

poems by Jenny L. Davis

American Indian Studies Series

Through a combination of blackout poems, occasional poems, and free verse, award-winning poet Jenny L. Davis rewrites the narrative of what it means to exist, to live in a present shaped by colonial violence that emphasizes the power of survival.

JANUARY 2026 978-1-61186-573-8 pb., 6 x 9, 90 pp., $16.95 (T)

Singing Under Snow

poems by Anne Haven McDonnell

Wheelbarrow Books

These poems explore queer ecology. Through vivid imagery, juxtaposition, imaginative leaps, and sonic spells, they blur our understanding of the biological, individuality, and death.

Queer Contiguities of Nigerian Literature

by Kerry Manzo

African Humanities and the Arts

Queer Contiguities of Nigerian Literature explores how normative ideas of sex and gender have shaped the development of Nigerian literature. The book traces this influence from the rise of mid-twentieth-century modernist writing to the contemporary appearance of LGBTQIA literature.

APRIL 2026 978-1-61186-557-8 pb., 6 x 9, 186 pp., $49.95 (S)

Violent Histories, Livable Futures

Forging the Power of the People

edited by Eric King Watts

Rhetoric of Power and Protest

Violent Histories, Livable Futures unpacks this complex dynamic through compelling historical case studies, spanning sub-Saharan Africa in the 1950s, post-World War II Guatemala, and the United States in the aftermath of George Floyd's murder. By tracing how societies have contended over which people matter and which do not, this book offers a deeply relevant exploration of power, representation, and the struggle for justice, all in pursuit of a more livable future.
