

CONTRIBUTORS

Carolyn T. Adams, Emerita Professor and Dean of Liberal Arts at Temple University, has published a half-dozen books, including four focused on the Philadelphia region.

Fallon Samuels Aidoo, Ph.D., a preservation planner and architectural historian, researches, teaches, and advises urban design and development in places of Black, Indigenous, and immigrant settlement.

David Amott received his Ph.D. in architectural history at the University of Delaware. Currently, he serves as Executive Director of Preservation Utah, the oldest statewide nonprofit organization in the western United States.

John F. Bauman is Professor Emeritus at California University of Pennsylvania. He also taught at the University of Pittsburgh and the University of Southern Maine and has authored or co-authored several books, including Public Housing, Race, and Renewal (1987) and Before Renaissance: Urban Planning in Pittsburgh, 1889–1943 (2006).

Jake Blumgart is a reporter for the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Peter Hendee Brown, FAIA, FAICP, PHD, is a Minneapolis-based development consultant, teacher, and the author of How Real Estate Developers Think (2015) and America's Waterfront Revival (2009).

Silas Chamberlin holds a doctorate in environmental history from Lehigh University and is author of On the Trail: A History of American Hiking (2016).

Michael J. Chiarappa is Research Professor of Chesapeake Regional Studies and Director of Cultural and Natural Resource Initiatives at Washington College's Center for Environment and Society.

William W. Cutler III is Professor of History Emeritus, at Temple University. His publications include Parents and Schools: The 150-Year Struggle for Control in American Education (2000).

Suzanne Lashner Dayanim holds a Ph.D. in geography and urban studies from Temple University and is currently on the faculty at West Chester University. Her research measures the value of community facilities to inner-ring suburban resilience.

Lu Ann De Cunzo, Ph.D. in American civilization and historical archaeology, is Professor of Anthropology at the University of Delaware. She researches lower Delaware Valley history and cultures.

Catherine D'Ignazio holds a Ph.D. in urban education from Temple University. She is an adjunct professor in gender studies at Rutgers University–Camden.

Bonny Beth Elwell is a Salem County historian and genealogist, serving on the board of several historical organizations and as editor of local history publications.

Bart Everts is a librarian at Rutgers University–Camden. His articles and reviews have appeared in Library Journal, Pennsylvania History, and other publications.

Jordan AP Fansler is a professor at Great Bay Community College in Portsmouth, N.H., where he studies the Atlantic world at its local levels through history and archaeology.

Bradley Flamm, Ph.D., is Director of the Office of Sustainability at West Chester University, a researcher and academic, and a resident of Northwest Philadelphia.

Gail Friedman is a public historian and retired city planner. She worked for sixteen years as a community planner in Bucks County, Pa. She now lives in North Carolina.

Stephanie Gamble received her Ph.D. from Johns Hopkins University in 2014 for her dissertation, “Capital Negotiations: Native Diplomats in the American Capital, 1789–1837.” She is a librarian at Sidwell Friends School.

Howard Gillette, Jr. is Professor of History Emeritus at Rutgers University–Camden and co-editor of the Encyclopedia of Greater Philadelphia. He is the author of Camden After the Fall (2005) and The Paradox of Urban Revitalization (2022), among other works.

Dylan Gottlieb is an assistant professor at Bentley University. He works on the history of cities and capitalism in the twentieth-century United States.

Skylar Harris is Digitization and Metadata Coordinator for the Hagley Library. Her publications include contributions to Pennsylvania History and various reference works.

Tim Hayburn earned his Ph.D. in colonial American history from Lehigh University and currently serves as an evaluator at Western Governors University.

Andrew Heath teaches history at Sheffield University. He is the author of In Union There Is Strength: Philadelphia in the Age of Urban Consolidation (2019).

John Hepp is Emeritus Professor of History at Wilkes University, and he writes on social, economic, and technological change in urban settings since 1700.

Laura Turner Igoe, Ph.D., is Chief Curator at the James A. Michener Art Museum in Doylestown, Pa. She specializes in nineteenth-century American art and material culture and its engagement with environmental conditions and change.

Christopher F. Jones is Associate Professor of History at Arizona State University. He is author of Routes of Power (2014).

Alison Kreitzer, Ph.D., is a historian and an independent researcher. Her work focuses on twentieth-century American recreation and technology-centered hobbies, such as automobile racing.

Anne E. Krulikowski, Ph.D., teaches the American city and material culture studies at West Chester University. She has published on these topics and a history of West Chester University.

Elizabeth M. Marcello is based in New York City. Her scholarship concerns how public authorities fit into transparent and democratic planning and policy processes.

Robert J. Mason was a long-tenured professor of geography and environmental studies at Temple University, with interests in land use, environmental policy, and hazards in North America and East Asia.

Jodine Mayberry is a retired journalist. She was a legal writer and editor for West Publications, a division of Thomson Reuters, for eighteen years.

W. Barksdale Maynard is a lecturer at the University of Delaware and author of seven university press books on history, art, and architecture.

Lynn Miller is Professor Emeritus of Political Science at Temple University. In addition to his scholarly publications, he is the author of a novel and a memoir. He also exhibits his work as a painter.

Elizabeth Milroy is Professor Emerita of Art & Art History, Drexel University. She is the author of The Grid and the River: Philadelphia's Green Places, 1682–1876 (2016).

Charlene Mires is Professor of History at Rutgers University–Camden and Editor-in-Chief of The Encyclopedia of Greater Philadelphia.

Michael Nairn is a landscape architect and faculty member of the Urban Studies Program at the University of Pennsylvania.

Stephen Nepa teaches history at Temple University and Moore College of Art and Design. A contributor to numerous books and journals, he lives in Philadelphia.

Abigail Perkiss is Associate Professor of History at Kean University, specializing in oral history, public humanities, and the recent past.

Terry L. Potter was Director of the J. Welles Henderson Research Center at the Independence Seaport Museum. She held a master's degree in American History from Rutgers University–Camden.

Mary Rizzo is Associate Professor of History at Rutgers University–Newark, where she specializes in twentieth-century U.S. cultural and urban history and public history.

Catharine Dann Roeber, Ph.D., is Interim Director of Academic Programs and Brock W. Jobe Associate Professor of Decorative Arts and Material Culture at Winterthur Museum, Garden & Library.

Andrew Slemmon is a graduate student in the Department of History at the University of Arizona.

Matthew Smalarz is Professor of History and Chair of General Education at Manor College. Manor College (2022), which is his first book, was published through Arcadia Publishing.

Robert F. Smith is Provost at Valley Forge Military College and author of the book Manufacturing Independence: Industrial Innovation in the American Revolution (2016).

Jean R. Soderlund is Professor of History Emeritus at Lehigh University and author of Separate Paths: Lenapes and Colonists in West New Jersey (2022).

Stephen T. Staggs, Ph.D., is a historian of early North America and author of Calvinists and Indians in the Northeastern Woodlands (2023).

Austin Stewart is currently serving as Visiting Professor of History and Native American Studies at Northland College in Ashland, Wis.

Cameron B. Strang is Associate Professor of History at the University of Nevada, Reno.

David Sullivan is a retired assistant managing editor at the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Mark L. Thompson is the author of The Contest for the Delaware Valley: Allegiance, Identity, and Empire in the Seventeenth Century (2013). He teaches at the University of Groningen.

Penelope S. Watson is an architect with Watson & Henry Associates in Greenwich, N.J., specializing in historic preservation.

Stephanie Grauman Wolf, a retired professor of history at the University of Delaware, was Director of the Winterthur Program and the McNeil Center for Early American Studies.

James J. Wyatt is Assistant Director at the National Archives and Records Administration's Center for Legislative Archives and a past president of the Association of Centers for the Study of Congress.

Mary Yee, Ed.D., is an urban planner and educational researcher who has worked extensively to ensure the rights of immigrant and refugee communities in education and neighborhood development.

Matthew A. Zimmerman earned his Ph.D. in history at Lehigh University and is currently Chair of the Department of History at Middle Georgia State University.